Introducing Tasha & Girl, a brand that is dedicated to bringing the natural taste of fruit to the Indian table.

Last year, we started with a small facility next to our farm at the foothills of Sinhgad near Pune. Some of the mangoes, if you have tasted our mango spreads, have come from less than 100m from where we processed these bottles. But there is a limit to how much noise and bustle the farm can handle before the dogs and cattle in the neighbourhood complain. Also, we can only make so many bottles and as evident from the strongly worded emails we got over our out-of-stock flavours, no amount is enough.

SEASON TWO OUR BEST YEAR YET

This season, we have moved to a larger place. We are making a larger number of bottles. We are making better and, more consistent product too. We have folks who wear lab coats and talk in Brix and Acidity, End-point temperatures and PSI. It is all business-like.

Until the girl walks in.

About a year and more ago, we started making these fruit spreads. Initially to be used as jam with sandwiches and waffles so that our girl can get something nutritious to eat without a fuss. But soon, someone used them as pie fillings, someone made smoothies from them, and someone put them in milkshakes. One of our favourite uses is marinade for meats and as mixers for drinks (they go great in chaats too, like the Mango-Chilli in paani-puri water). We have had folks eat them with ice creams too. Kids have asked for them with dosas as well. So who knows how far and wide their use has gone.

SO MUCH MORE.

NOT JAMS.
NOT EVEN CLOSE.

But each time we hear of a new way our spreads are being used, our hearts grow a little bigger and our kitchen becomes that much more determined to bring better, tastier, and natural foods to everyone's homes.
